1. What role did you take on your Planning Team?

I feel like I took on more of a support role for this project. Mostly, others identified needs and I followed up with solutions, especially with the video recording portion of the project.

2. How did your Strengths help you in this role?

I enjoy problem solving and I'm fairly good at it. We needed a way to meet virtually and record a presentation, so I suggested Zoom, which I know has a record function. I didn't have a lot of thoughts on the topic (how to stop people from staying past close at the law library) that weren't already being suggested, but I supported ideas that involved communication with other groups like university administration and campus security.

3. Thinking about the Management and Administration competence areas you worked on during this project, what was easy in this Skill Builder?

I thought that we did well with using the tools given to us (the CRAAP test and the GOOMES chart) to work through our chosen problem and assess/evaluate our proposed solutions. Writing out different considerations for solutions is an excellent way to make sure that every aspect of each solution is considered and compared in the same way.

4. Regarding the competences, what was hard in this Skill Builder?

While I thought we put a good effort into considering how patrons might be affected by enforcing the library closures more strictly, it is always difficult to recognize every marginalized group and find solutions that benefit everyone equally. It's likely that there are patron groups that we haven't considered and who will be disserved by the suggested policy. It's also never satisfying to come to the conclusion that meeting a specific community's needs (like the unhoused/homeless community) isn't within the ability of the library's resources or mission.

5. What worked well with your Planning Team?

Communication is one of the most important parts of working well with others, and I thought our team did very well at organizing and sharing our thoughts. We used a google doc for most of the planning and exchanged emails to coordinate a Zoom meeting for the presentation recording.

6. What did not work well with your Planning Team?

I don't think anything was particularly bad. There was a slight miscommunication during the presentation where one of my team members started talking about the part of the project that I thought was going to be my part. I wasn't sure if I had misunderstood and she was doing really well, so I didn't say anything until she was done. Instead of redoing it, I just elaborated on my part and improvised a conclusion, which I think ended up being pretty good.

7. For the competence elements A - G, write one sentence for each that describes your work on this project related to that skill area.

4A. As part of a team, I considered the budgetary limitations of the law library and proposed solutions consistent with those limitations.

4B. Library staff wear all sorts of hats, but there are limits to what can be asked and expected of a librarian, so we included other departments (like campus security) into our planning.

4C. We used the CRAAP test and created GOOMES charts to assess/evaluate our proposed solutions.

4D. We identified an underserved community and included suggestions for connecting people with resources that could help.

4E. We recognized that any kind of change can be difficult and included space in the process for employees to discuss concerns.

4F. Together with my teammates, we created a plan to solve the problem of patrons staying after closing at the law library at UI.

4G. As a team, we used email, Zoom, and GoogleDocs to communicate and complete the assignment.

8. Why is the Evidence Based Planning important for management and administration?

As humans, we are fallible and prone to bias. It's easy to consider things from our own perspective and the perspective of the people that we interact with regularly, but it's much harder to consider from marginalized perspectives. Also, people often say they want one thing but actually need or will use something completely different. Using evidence-based planning helps management and administration reduce bias and learn what is actually happening in their organizations, instead of making decisions based on what they think is happening. This means that they address actual problems instead of imagined ones, thus improving the outcomes of their organizational goals.

9. How would you grade your Team's ability to work together?

I would give our team an A for teamwork. We didn’t have the communication issues that we had with the first projects and everything got done on time.

10. How would you grade your contribution to your Team on this Skill Builder?

I would give my contribution an A. I felt that my work with the Zoom and the recording were important to our team successfully completing the assignment.
